GEAR

REVIEWS, BUYING ADVICE & TECHNICAL QUESTIONS
ANSWERED – ALL IN LANGUAGE YOU UNDERSTAND

Well, that's us back from the NAMM show in Los Angeles. And yes, we had a great time, just in case you were asking. We didn't even get arrested... this time. Now that we're home again the jetlag is playing havoc with our rugged good looks, but hey, it's a small price to pay for being the first to bring you all the latest news from gear land, USA. To be fair, the constant sunshine, ice-cold beer and copious amounts of Mexican grub eased our pain a bit. So, don't go feeling too sorry for us, OK?

This year's NAMM show was the best yet, with a great mix of showstoppers and madcap ideas (anyone fancy a neck protector 'sock' that can also be used as a strap and duster?!). But we don't want to give away too much just yet – turn the page for our full report on the show. There are lashings of groovy photos to get you all excited about the abundant goodies heading your way in the next six months. Believe us when we say 2005 is gonna be a great year for all you gear-hounds out there. And, as usual, you'll see all the best guitars, amps, effects and accessories tested and rated in these hallowed gear pages of TG.

Right, we're off to lie down in a dark room to try and rid our minds of all those lovely Dean girls. They promised they would keep in touch with us, but they never do...

See ya next month,

Ed Mitchell – Reviews Editor

REVIEWS

TG's gear section gives a rating for all the products reviewed. This is designed to give you the clearest idea of how a product performs on our test bench. Opinions may vary on any given product, so we also record demos of review gear on the CD to let you make up your own mind.

BEST BUY

The Total Guitar Best Buy award (look out for the logo) is awarded to any piece of gear that scores five out of five. To get this award the item must have scored highly in construction, features, playability, sound and value for money.

A pair of Maverick's 'A' series humbuckers give this guitar a truly modern metal grunt. Slash, Dimebag, Zakk – they're all in here...

Maverick's patented Evolution roller controls provide an innovative way of tweaking tone and volume. They look damn sexy, too

24 frets might look intimidating to start with, but it's a perfect canvass for your developing technique

MAVERICK F-1

MEET THE MAVERICK F-1 – ROCK GUITAR'S NEW TOP GUN. ENGAGE! WORDS: HENRY YATES

> A Maverick? There goes the neighbourhood...

For a firm that's only been going eight years, Maverick has one hell of a reputation. Ever since the original Maverick F-1 hit the streets in 2000, we've come to regard these guitars as the most fun you can have with two humbuckers, an overdriven stack and a deserted postal district. So, when Maverick's Mark James told us he'd tweaked the F-1's design to make it even more mental, TG's reaction was a strange mixture of excitement and fear. Better insert those earplugs – this could get a little rough!

Who are these Maverick fellas anyway?

You'll feel a small swell of patriotism to hear that Maverick are an English company. Then you'll feel a slight sense of deflation as we tell you that the actual assembly of their guitars takes place in Korea. Still, if you're expecting shoddy workmanship then you're barking up the wrong tree. Since being introduced to a small Korean custom workshop by guitar industry guru Trevor Wilkinson in 1997, the Maverick boys have made it their mission to create the most desirable electrics on the market at prices within reach of the great unwashed.

It's a simple case of economics. By assembling their guitars in the Far East, Maverick are able to keep production costs low and quality high. Customers don't pay a premium for the pampered working conditions of the West, and the result is a cracking product at a surprisingly low price. Even though the initial design process and final checkover of these beautiful guitars takes place on British soil, technically they hold a Korean passport.

Does the F-1 have decent materials?

Too right! The spec sheet reads like a 'who's who' of the tree world. First off, you've got a solid basswood body that's contoured by hand and made of timbers carefully selected and stored in a humidity-controlled environment. This is not your average Korean-built rock guitar, dude.

While the original F-1's neck was made of three separate chunks of maple, this axe's bolt-on item is fashioned from a single piece that's been aged in a kiln for a year to sweeten its tone. It's typical of Maverick's idealistic ethos when it comes to construction, and the kind of touch you'd normally expect to find on a swanky custom model. Finally, there's a AAA Indian rosewood fretboard stretching as far as the eye can see. Smashing!

Talk me through the rest...

A cursory glance at the F-1's bridge will have the metal fraternity hooting like chimps on heat. Yep, this guitar features a Floyd Rose tremolo and is therefore your ticket to extreme bends, screaming divebombs and all that fun stuff.

Since its emergence in the 1980s, the Floyd Rose concept has brought joy to countless hairy men across the planet. As a principle it's simple, but devastatingly effective. By locking the strings in place at the nut and bridge, the floating trem lets

WHO'S IT FOR?

It's probably easier to say who the F-1 isn't for: vicars, librarians and those of a nervous disposition. Everyone else will love it.

ALTERNATIVELY

Maverick X-1 – £499

Jackson RR5 – £899

you yank at the F-1's dual-feel whammy bar like a horny teenager when his parents are out – without suffering the tuning slips that early wobblers such as Jimi Hendrix had to contend with. Admittedly, this kind of trem can be a headache for uninitiated players to set up, but once in position it will only take the odd tweak of the bridge tuners to keep everything ticking over. Lazy and cack-handed? Then you should go for the fixed bridge version, which also weighs in at £499.

How does it play?

Like sliding down a greasy pole. This axe is almost effortless to play and these Maverick guys really know their onions when it comes to building the perfect snarling metal beast. For instance, with 24 frets lined up on the fingerboard, Maverick have included generous cutaways at the top and bottom, giving you unbeatable access to the upper echelons without expense to the neck join. To ensure the guitar is comfortable for both stage and sofa, you'll find a rib contour round the back that fitted TG's chest like a, er, glove. And just when you think things couldn't get any peachier you will notice how slim the F-1's neck profile is. Maverick reckon it's the fastest around, and anyone who heard our rendition of Surfing With The Alien wouldn't argue with them.

What's with the tone controls?

We thought you'd never ask! The F-1's patented Evolution tone controls are probably the best example of this guitar straying from a traditional electric guitar blueprint and coming up smelling of roses. Like the pickup selector and strap buttons, these roller controls are recessed into the body; not only making them look damn cool, but also stopping you twatting them during frenzied windmill sessions. Style over substance? Maybe so, but they'll make a great conversation-starter with that nymphomaniac in the front row.

LORD OF THE STRINGS CHANGING STRINGS ON A FLOATING TREMOLO

Some 20 years after its inception the Floyd Rose tremolo still commands fear and respect in equal measure. We know all about the benefits: the outrageous scope for whammy abuse, the divebombs and the showboating. Yet somehow the floating trem unit has become a byword for hassle and faff; a time-consuming trimming that stands between you and the act of rocking out. Perhaps the most common slander of all is that changing strings on this type of tremolo takes the best part of an afternoon. Let's straighten that one out, right now.

A custom-designed Floyd Rose tremolo makes the F-1 the perfect tool for divebombs and wobbles

ON THE CD

TRACK 39
We recorded the Maverick F-1 on all three pickup positions through a Vox Tonelab modelling unit to show off the guitar's awesome power and wide tonal range.

OK, so how does it sound?

When Maverick first arrived on the scene the muscular punch of its pickups got TG all sweaty and excited. We weren't the only ones, either. By the time the word had spread, half the Download bill had taken pliers to their guitars and crammed in a pair of Maverick humbuckers. Mark James, for instance, has nailed a sound that sits poised between clarity and warmth. He could tell us how he did it, but then he'd have to kill us.

With that in mind it's no surprise that the Maverick 'A' series humbuckers deliver a superbly powerful distortion. There's some great mid to be coaxed from the bridge pickup and the tone has enough body to let single notes fill the room before fading, but you'll never find your riffs growing too thick or muffled. Maverick have reworked the copper windings in the neck humbucker too, adding more beef to deliver a bluesier tone than the original F-1. Ease off the gain, meanwhile, and you'll be hit by the authority of the Maverick's unadulterated tone. It's warm and funky, and nowhere near as flat as the clean performance delivered by some 'metal' axes out there.

Come on then, is it Mastercard time?

We think so. For £499, the Maverick F-1 is an individual axe which stands out in the vast forest of pointy wannabes. And once you plug it in and hang it round your neck you'll see exactly what all the fuss is about. At some point soon Maverick is going to snag a superstar endorsee that will send the price of these axes skyrocketing. Until that day comes you owe it to yourself to try this superb guitar. We couldn't give an F-1 about anything else...

FOR: Stunning looks, stunning sounds, stunted price
AGAINST: A locking trem isn't for everyone...
